

Crisis-Resilient Boards: Lessons from Value

Stephen Davis (Harvard University) and Sandra Guerra (Yale University)

Ever since the onset of the pandemic, corporate directors, their advisors, and investors have sought to identify board characteristics and practices that might be associated with superior management of epic disruption. Might any of the board features commonly rated by market analysts as governance-positive have helped companies navigate economic challenges posed by COVID? What lessons may be learned to make boards more crisis-resilient? Research is...
